What does equality for women look like to you?

Becky Dean, Gulfport: “Diversification. Where everyone has an equal footing.”

Yolanda Roman, Gulfport: “Equality for women is: Stop having men collectively make decisions about our healthcare, our bodies, the abortion bans and the tax on our reproductive systems, especially now that the supreme court has taken a position on birth control. We are the majority and to come to the decision based on critical religious ideology is distasteful. It is the worst thing to happen to women.”

Gulfport Women’s March a Huge Success

Dear Editor: Well done, Gulfport! The Women’s March Saturday was a huge success thanks to the thoughtful organizing efforts of Susan Koenig and others. I was so honored to be asked to lead this very special stroll around town! Thank you to all the participants, some, like me who traveled just a few steps outside their homes here in Gulfport to participate, and those who traveled a greater distance to stand together in unity. It was a jubilant celebration of democracy and a way for like-minded people to come together.

Gulfport is the perfect place for such a gathering because this community excels at celebrating diversity and honoring the differences which drive the uniqueness of our identity. No matter what issues or concerns people wanted to highlight, there was room for all. I have heard from several marchers who expressed gratitude that they were able to truly celebrate after the march in the Art Courtyard with music and dancing.

A special thanks goes to the business owners of the Art Courtyard who planned so well and provided a space for such a celebration. I hope this event continues to grow every year, so I have one cautionary note for the future: Let’s all please keep the March pure in purpose. No person should pose as an organizer in an attempt to use the gathering for self-promotion or to further their self-interests. Let’s ensure that the Women’s March remains the special gathering it was intended to be.

Sincerely,
Laura Henderson
First Lady of Gulfport

The Little Local Library with a Big Story
By Debbie Wolfe

As part of winning the highest honor from a national group in 2019, the Gulfport Public Library will be in the limelight again in 2020 when StoryCorps visits on January 28 though 30 to conduct recordings from groups of locals, one of which may be featured on National Public Radio, said Library Director David Mather.

“They are bringing two of their professional storytellers,” said Mather. “Every hour, they will meet with two people. One person usually takes the lead and starts talking to the other. The StoryCorps storytellers facilitate the conversation, when needed. They also bring questions with them to spark conversations.”

According to the StoryCorps website, the mission of their group is to “preserve and share humanity’s stories in order to build connections between people and create a more just and compassionate world.”

StoryCorps, an independent non-profit, began in October 2003 with the opening of an unscripted story booth in Grand Central Terminal in New York City. Since then, they have won prestigious awards and grants in addition to partnering with other like-minded groups like National Public Radio (NPR).

A total of 30 local people in 15 groups of two will be interviewed at the Gulfport Public Library over the course of three days.

“Mainly, the conversations should revolve around is the library itself,” said Mather. Like “how the library affects the community positively and if they have any specific stories about how the library has helped them in their own life.”

On Tuesday, May 7, 2019, it was announced that the Gulfport Library was one of five library winners of the prestigious National Medal for Museum and Library Service from the Institute of Museum and Library Services. In addition to receiving $10,000 in grant funding, the award also includes the StoryCorps recording sessions.

During the 2019 awards press conference at the library, U.S. Rep. Charlie Crist, D-FL 13th District described the facility as, “impressive.” In his nomination letter, Crist wrote that the “library offers several invaluable resources to its diverse community” including an art-makers’ space, a free summer lunch program for all kids and educational programs for older residents. He also noted it is nationally recognized for its LGBTQ Resource Center – the only one of its kind in the state of Florida. The center “provides incredible educational opportunities to community members of all backgrounds.”

In his notification letter to Mather on May 7, 2019, Crist wrote, “I am incredibly proud to have an institution of your stature serving the people of Pinellas and setting the standard for libraries across the country.”

During January’s audio recording sessions, StoryCorps will “speak to everyone for 40 minutes,” said Mather. All of the interviews will be placed into the national archives.

“One of them will be professionally produced and condensed by StoryCorps into their three-minute blocks that they have on NPR and other places,” said Mather. “That one will also be put into the StoryCorps archives online.”

The LGBTQ Resource Center hosted author Ellen M. Levy Thursday afternoon, January 17 at the Gulfport Public Library. Levy brought to life the struggles and confusion of romantic love between two young Jewish women in 1910 as she shared passages from her historical fiction romance novel, “Romance at Stonegate.”

Levy, who owns a timeshare named Stonegate in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, was inspired by her surroundings to write a short story for her writing group. Soon that short story turned into four chapters and eventually a novel with over 300 pages.

“Romance at Stonegate,” is about two young Jewish women, 17 and 18, who find themselves in an old-fashioned romance, in a time that did not accept their love.

“In 1910 the word ‘lesbian’ was a slur and primarily used by crass women,” said Levy. “It is exciting, yet frightening to discover what it means to be a lesbian in a world that is not ready for them.”

During Levy’s informal discussion of how she came to write her novel, she gave attendees advice about writing.

“When I started, I was not a great writer. I’m better now than I was. This book took 48 edits,” Levy admitted. “I encourage any of you who are interested in writing but think ‘I’m not a good enough writer, I don’t know what to write,’ just get started. Get started and you can get help.”

Levy also said that a sequel to “Romance at Stonegate” is in the making.

Dressed in 1910 era garb, Ellen M. Levy, author of “Romance at Stonegate,” held an informal discussion at the Gulfport Public Library, Thursday, January 16. “If I had known what it would take to write a book of historical fiction there is no way I would have considered it,” confessed Levy. “I didn’t like history; I wasn’t someone who was always interested in the previous world. I wanted to live in the current world and what I’ve discovered is that my favorite part about writing is getting to learn what life was like before.”

15th Annual Pink Flamingo Home Tour

Amazing remodels and stately Roebuck homes, outdoor-living wonders and fine arts galore are some of the treats awaiting your visit during Gulfport’s 15th annual Pink Flamingo Home Tour on Saturday, March 7 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The tour begins at the registration area at Scout Hall, 5315 28th Ave. S., and takes in the area east of Beach Boulevard to 49th Street South, and the south side of Gulfport Boulevard to the waterfront. It’s close to the waterfront district, so there will be plenty of time to take a lunch break or shop in historic downtown.

Trolleys will be circulating throughout the tour so there is no need to drive house to house. In fact, the homes are close enough for walking or biking. Parking is limited. Visitors are encouraged to park in one of Gulfport’s many outlying lots: Senior Center, Catherine Hickman Theater, Recreation Center, Wood Ibis Park and beach parking. From any of those you can easily hitch a ride to Scout Hall and then hop on for the tour.

Tickets are only $20 at the Gulfport Welcome Center (cash or check only) and Gulfport Beach Bazaar (cash, check, credit card), at 3101 and 3115 Beach Blvd. S., respectively. They can be purchased online at pinkflamingohometour.com/buy-tickets. Tickets will also be available at the registration area on the day of the tour for $25.

The Pink Flamingo Home Tour is a fundraiser for the Gulfport Merchants Chamber.
